OLD-TIME CARICATURES-No. 12.

[Reproduced Expressly for Twinkles from a Collection of Antique Cartoons.

THIS cartoon was printed and circulated in England over 140 years ago. Its date is1756. It recalls a most dramatic episode in English history—the loss of the island of Minorca, which was taken from the English by the French in that year. When the news teached England there was intense excitement. Admiral Byng, who had been sent out with a fleet to relieve Fort St. Philip, and had teached to do so, became the object of public fury. He was burned and hanged in effigy all over England.

Bying showed that the fleet under his command was unfit to cope with the French fleet off Minorca with any chance of success, and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to Gibraltar, leaving Minorca to the French. His explanation was scouted, though afterwards admitted to and so justified his return to the first his properties.

The above cartoon appeared at the height of the national rage against the unfortunate Admiral, and reflects it. The British lion is departed as having lost one of his four paws (Minorca), and the people of all classes, as well as the army and navy officers, are shown in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries. In the left corner we see a group of aristocrats who in the crowd gathered around the noble animal, uttering various indignant cries.

THE EFFECT OF A BIG WORD.

M ". O'HOOLHAN : "Git out av the way or Pil run over yez!"

Mr. Allright: "Sir! I'll have you know the right of way belongs to the pedestrian,"

Mr. O'Hoolihan: "I begs yer honor's pardon; I didn't know yez was one of them fellers."